Introduction

The purpose of this report is to understand the Segmentation, Targeting, and Positioning (STP) strategies of three globally recognized brands—Uniqlo, Starbucks, and Samsung, through a field visit to Ambience Mall, Delhi. The mall visit gave us a chance to interact with staff, watch how customer behaved, and note down key insights about pricing, customer focus, product categories, and store strategies. This hands-on exercise bridges theoretical understanding of STP with real-world application.

Methodology

To understand the brand strategies in depth which is beyond our theory, our team conducted a field visit to Ambience Mall, Delhi, with the objective of observing brand strategies in action. We visited the outlets of Uniqlo, Starbucks, and Samsung. The data collection involved:

- Direct observation of store layout, pricing, and product range.
- Short interactions with store staff regarding brand strategy, customer demographics, and promotional activities.
- Noting down customer footfall and purchasing preferences.

These observations were then decoded using the STP framework to understand how each brand positions itself in the Indian market.

STP Analysis: UNIQLO – "Made for All"

Uniqlo, a Japanese apparel brand, had established itself in India with stores in Delhi, Chandigarh, and Lucknow, with a future mindset of entering in more cities. The Ambience Mall outlet presented a detailed overview of its market positioning.

Segmentation: Instead of dividing by gender, Uniqlo segments customers based on lifestyle and income levels. With prices from Rs.199 to Rs.10,000, they each to both budget and premium shoppers.

Targeting: The brand primarily targets college students and young professionals who value everyday wear with quality, simplicity and affordability. Families and working adults are also connect with the brand as per its tagline 'Made for All.

Positioning: Uniqlo presents itself as a brand which offers everyday wear. With over 350 product varieties, its positioning is mainly on comfort, inclusivity, and practical fashion rather than seasonal trends. Bags and accessories are also available, though demand is comparatively lower.

Core Value: Uniqlo's core value lies in making fashion simple, functional, and inclusive. The brand champions the idea of "Made for All", offering versatile basics that fit seamlessly into every lifestyle—from students to working professionals and families. Instead of chasing seasonal fads, Uniqlo delivers timeless essentials that balance quality, affordability, and comfort, ensuring that everyday wear remains both practical and stylish.

STP Analysis: STARBUCKS

Starbucks is a global coffeehouse chain that has carefully adapted its strategies in India. The Ambience Mall outlet provided several insights into its STP framework.

Segmentation: Starbucks segments its customers primarily by age and lifestyle. The younger generation (18+) is the main customer base in mall-based outlets, while older demographics are less frequent in such locations

Targeting: The brand targets students, professionals and people who enjoy socializing in a premium space. Starbucks' store locations selection is so strategic as they focus on malls or prime streets, focusing on areas with high potential foot traffic.

Positioning: Starbucks positions itself as a premium lifestyle cafe offering not just beverages but also a memorable experience. Customer loyalty and engagement is mainly driven by quarterly offers, loyalty initiatives, seasonal promotions, and strong service culture. Employees use the LATTE model for customer service (Listen, Acknowledge, take action, Thank, and Explain).

Core Value: Starbucks builds its brand around more than just coffee—it's about delivering a premium lifestyle experience. The core value is reflected in world-class product quality, paired with personalized service rooted in its LATTE model (Listen, Acknowledge, take action, Thank, Explain). Every store is designed to be a "third place" beyond home and office, where customers enjoy not only beverages but also a warm, inviting ambiance that fosters connection, relaxation, and community.

STP Analysis: SAMSUNG – "Do what you can't"

Samsung is a global electronics leader with a strong retail presence in India. The Ambience Mall store gave practical insights into its operations.

Segmentation: Samsung divides its customers by income and technology adoption. Premium phones like Galaxy S25 series phones attract higher income and tech forward customers.

Targeting: The brand targets mid-to-premium segments, with the most accepted price range being around Rs. 70,000 for its flagship models. This reflects a focus on aspirational and innovation driven buyers who are ready to pay for it.

Positioning: Samsung positions itself as a technology innovator providing reliability and premium experiences. An effective supply chain supports this promise, with a warehouse situated just 4 km away, which facilitates delivery of required models within 30 minutes.

Core Value: Samsung's identity is anchored in pioneering innovation—bringing cutting-edge technology to customers while ensuring it remains accessible. The brand continuously pushes boundaries in design and functionality, from smartphones to electronics, while maintaining a strong focus on reliability and after-sales service. With rapid delivery systems and wide product availability, Samsung reinforces its commitment to customer satisfaction, positioning itself as a trusted technology partner in people's everyday lives.

Comparative Insights & Learnings

The three brands demonstrate distinct applications and applied STP in their own ways:

- Uniqlo focuses on inclusivity and affordability, making everyday clothing accessible for diverse segments. They offer a wide range of price which makes it for all whether students, working adults or families.
- Starbucks emphasizes exclusivity and lifestyle positioning, creating a premium environment for younger demographics where they can socialize, work or relax.
- Samsung strikes a balance between innovation and affordability, by aiming aspirational customers in the premium segment.

Based on these observations, our team learned that while STP is not just a theory, it's a tool that every brand adapts depending on their brand's industry, values, and target market. The mall visit highlighted the importance of aligning pricing, location, and customer service with brand positioning.

Our Reflection as a Marketing Student: What made Positioning strong or weak?

From our visit, we understood that positioning feels strong when it is consistent across products, pricing, and customer experience. Uniqlo's "Made for All" message was convincing because its variety and affordability matched the claim, though accessories felt secondary. Starbucks created the strongest emotional pull with ambience, service, and loyalty programs, but its high prices limit accessibility. Samsung balanced innovation with choice, offering devices for different budgets, though this sometimes diluted its premium image. Overall, we realized that strong positioning is not just a tagline but something customers actually experience at every touchpoint.
